Risk disclosure

Last updated 23 October 2026

Trading involves risk. You can lose some or all of the money you put in.

Please read this before using Sting or acting on anything you see on our website, in the beta or on social media.

Sting is in testing

Today Sting trades only a practice account with pretend money. Practice and back-tested results are not real results. Real trading can turn out worse, because of costs, delays, price gaps and market conditions that tests do not capture.

No strategy always works

A strategy that passed every test can still lose money, or stop working when markets change. Past results, real or simulated, never guarantee future results.

Crypto carries extra risk

Crypto prices can move very fast and fall sharply. Smaller coins can be hard to sell at a fair price. Crypto is often less regulated, and you may have little or no protection if something goes wrong.

Automatic trading has its own risks

Software errors, internet or broker outages, or fast markets can delay or prevent trades, including stop-losses. A stop-loss limits losses in normal conditions, but it does not guarantee a price: in a fast fall a trade can close at a worse price.

Costs reduce returns

Fees, price spreads and taxes reduce what you keep. Frequent trading increases costs.

Only use money you can afford to lose

Do not use money you need for living costs, debts or emergencies. If you are unsure whether trading suits you, get independent advice.

Not advice

Sting and Agentic Honeypot do not give personal investment advice. The beta shows a system being tested, not a recommendation. Please do not copy its trades.
